Replacement single channel programmer and PCB

After our engineers visit on call reference 18156 please see the engineers call notes below followed by the quote for the supply and fit of parts.

Called to site to look at issue with the heating boiler.
Found that the wall hung glow worm micron 50ff boiler was without a power supply. It was found that the supply from the electrical distribution board had tripped. The boiler was isolated and the mcb was reset. The boiler was then tested and it was found that the single channel programmer had failed and requires replacing. The programmer was linked out to test the boiler but the boiler would not operate, on investigation it was found that the control pcb was damaged by water from a previous leak in the roof and also requires replacing. Was unable to check/test any other components on the heating system due to the failed components. The customer was advised of this and stated that any additional works could be rectified when the known failed parts were replaced.

The customer would like a quote to replace the failed parts. It may be programmed in around the time the roof is replaced so that the flue could be inspected as this passes into the roof space which has very challenging access.

The loft access hatch is located approximately 4m above the landing on the first floor of the stair case. A working access survey is required prior to accessing the roof space.
